Decisive Factor In Whether Israel Gets World Bank Loan For Port Program Is N. Y. Expert's Report

Eugene R. Black, president of the International Bank for Reconstruction and Development, indicated in Jerusalem, that Israel might have to set up an independent port authority before she can qualify for a loan for her port expansion program.

Israel has asked the Bank's help in her five-year program to expand the ports of Haifa and Elath and to build a new deepwater port on the Mediterranean at Ashdod, says the New York Times. The program is expected to cost $64,000,000. Israel also has asked the bank's help in a $42,000,000 project to build dikes into the Dead Sea to increase production of potash there. This project is thought to stand a poorer chance of gaining World Bank assistance.

Mr. Black visited the ports and the site at Ashdod. He has also talked in Beersheba with officials of the Dead Sea works. It was his first visit to Israel. If the loan is approved, it will be Israel's first from the Bank.

In an interview at his hotel, Mr. Black told the New York Times that he had been much impressed by the development he had seen throughout the country. But he was not altogether enthusiastic about the management and development of the Israeli ports. "We have found that the best way to run ports is to have an autonomous port authority," he said. "We have found that when they are run by ministries they have not been very successful."

There has been a great deal of conflict among municipalities and state ministries in Israel over who should assume responsibilities as they arise in planning and developing the nation's ports. Haifa has been upset over the prospect of losing trade and new industry when the port at Ashdod is built. The existing port at Tel Aviv and Jaffa, in an open roadstead and too rough for use in winter months, is eventually to be abandoned, and this prospect has caused some concern.

"We have not made a decision yet," Mr. Black said, "but unless we are satisfied that the ports are properly set up and properly run, a loan will not be forthcoming, says the New York Times. No decision will be made, Mr. Black said, until the program has been studied by Austin J. Tobin, executive director of the Port of New York Authority.

Mr. Tobin's visit is being made at the request of the International Bank for Reconstruction and Development, which is studying Israel's application for a loan for a five-year port expansion program. The development of Israel's harbor facilities is expected to cost $64,000,000.

Reports from Tel Aviv are that the Government feels it has a strong case to present to the bank. The bank has approved a $56,000,000 loan for the United Arab Republic for widening the Suez Canal although Israeli cargoes are barred from that international waterway.

In confirming that it had asked Mr. Tobin to act as its adviser, World Bank officials in Washington described him as the "most highly qualified man" in that field. Mr. Tobin's salary as head of the New York-New Jersey agency is $60,000 a year. He will spend ten days to two weeks studying Israel's port problems and its harbors. While there, he will consult with Eugene R. Black, president of the World Bank.

Mr. Tobin said he would not be paid for his special services and would use part of his "vacation time" for the task. Bank officials said Mr. Tobin had been asked specifically to find out whether Israel needed a semi-autonomous agency to carry out the expansion plan most efficiently.

Directors of the bank indicated that they favored an authority because it would mean organizational and management control would be largely independent of the Government.

They said such a status had been instrumental in the success of the Port of New York Authority, according to the New York Times. The Port Authority operates twenty-one land, sea, and air projects, including the regional system of airports, marine terminals in Brooklyn, Newark and Port Elizabeth, and the tunnels and bridges that link Manhattan and Richmond with New Jersey. Its investments have just gone over the billion-dollar mark.

Bank directors indicated Mr. Tobin's report probably would be the decisive factor in determining whether they would grant the loan and in fixing they would allot for its port development program. Separate engineering and

International Court Judge Was British Law Authority

Sir Hersch Lauterpacht, one of the fifteen judges of the International Court of Justice at The Hague, the Netherlands, died of a heart attack in a London hospital after an operation. He was 62 years old. Sir Hersch was a leading British authority on international law. He was born at Zholkva, which is now in the Russian Ukraine, and studied at the Universities of Lvov, Vienna, and London, says the New York Times. In 1927 he became an assistant lecturer at the London School of Economics.

He was named a reader in public international law at the University of London in 1932 and Whewell Professor of International Law at Cambridge in 1938. He served on four separate occasions during the Nineteen-Thirties and Forties as a Professor at The Hague Academy of International Law.

He had visited America several times, notably as a Carnegie Endowment Professor in 1940, and as an adviser to the United Nations Secretariat on the codification of international law in 1948. He also was a visiting professor at Wellesley College in 1941, and at the University of Colorado in 1948.

Sir Hersch was named a judge of the International Court in October, 1954, and was knighted in 1956 by the British Government. In 1945-46 he was a member of the British War Crimes Executive, the British prosecuting team at the Nuremberg trials of Nazi leaders.

Among his many other offices were memberships in the Permanent Court of Arbitration and the Institute of International Law. He was on the United Nations International Law Commission from 1951 to 1955, and had served as president of the French-Swedish and Norwegian-Portuguese Conciliations Commissions of that body.

Among his books were: "The Function of Law in the International Community;" "The Development of International law by the Permanent Court of International Justice"; and "International Law and Human Rights," says the New York Times. He edited the British Yearbook of International Law from 1944 to 1955 and performed the same function for other law publications.

U. S. Warned On Religious Tension In Election By Leaders

A Roman Catholic educator and a Protestant religious leader called for a conference of religious leaders to explore means of reducing religious tension arising from the U.S. Presidential campaign.

The joint appeal was made by Prof. John J. Kane, chairman of the Department of Sociology of Notre Dame University, and Dr. Claud Nelson, director of the Department of Religious Liberty of the National Council of Churches in the U. S. A.

Their statement marked the close of the four-day, fifty-third annual meeting of the American Jewish Committee, a human relations agency, at the Commodore Hotel, in New York, says the New York Times. Dr. Nelson and Professor Kane had participated in a closed session on "Religion And The Presidency," and their statement was a result of discussions at that session.

Dr. Nelson said that although the proposed conference might not easily be arranged, a high-level meeting, "particularly between Protestant and Catholic leaders," would be advisable if the election situation approached "a boiling point."

In their statement, both warned that Americans had been witnessing "an increasing tendency towards tension and interreligious difficulty which has beset a great number of Catholics and Protestants in our country." This tendency, they said, "has been on the upswing," and may become "a real source of divisiveness and a serious threat to domestic harmony."

The current election campaign, they declared, "seemed to be developing in a manner which could provoke and exacerbate even further — perhaps to a dangerous point — these tensions." The American Jewish Committee adopted a similar position in a resolution. It urged that "candidates be considered on the basis of their individual qualifications and their individual positions on all public issues of concern to the American people."

Herbert B. Ehrmann, Boston lawyer, was elected to a second term as president of the agency. Named as vice presidents were: Martin L. Butzel, of Detroit; Andrew Goodman, of New York; and Irving Saloman, of San Diego, Calif.

Speaking at a luncheon session, Mrs. Caroline K. Simon, Secretary of State of New York, charged that there were still "far too many manifestations of hateful prejudice and mean destructive discrimination in clubs; in too many types of executive employment; and in too many residential areas."

Guggenheim Fund Assists 303 With $1,400,000 For Study

Awards totalling $1,400,000 to finance study by 303 scholars and artists in many fields were announced by the John Simon Guggenheim Memorial Foundation. Study projects proposed by the winners of this year's fellowships range from highly technical research in physics and chemistry to purely artistic and creative work in poetry, painting and other arts.

Forty-one of the fellowships were awarded in New York City and the suburbs and twenty-one elsewhere in New York State, says the New York Times. Nine went to Connecticut and eight to New Jersey.

This group is the thirty-sixth of the annual awards by the Foundation established by the late U.S. Senator from Colorado, Simon Guggenheim, and Mrs. Guggenheim in memory of a son, John, who died in 1922.

Fellowships are granted "without distinction on account of race, color, or creed" to men and women "of the highest capacity for scholarly research, demonstrated by the previous publication of contributions to knowledge, and to persons of unusual and proved creative ability in the fine arts." They must be citizens and permanent residents of one of the American republics, the Republic of the Philippines, Canada, or the British Caribbean area.

The grants are intended to help those receiving them "to advance themselves to higher levels of accomplishment in their fields through carrying on the studies for which the fellowships are awarded."

The committee of selection consisted of: Dr. George W. Corner, historian of the Rockefeller Institute; Dr. Henri M. Peyre, Professor of French, Yale University; Dr. Carl O. Sauer, retired Professor of Geography, University of California; Dr. Edwin Bidwell Wilson, retired Professor of Vital Statistics, Harvard University School of Public Health; and Dr. Louis Booker Wright, director of the Folger Shakespeare Library, Washington, D. C., chairman.

W. German Law Stops New Trials For Nazi Killing Soon

West Germany decided to oppose any extension of the statute of limitations dealing with crimes committed under the Nazis. As the decision became known, it was disclosed in East Berlin that the East German Communist Government had sent notes on the subject to a number of countries of the war-time anti-Hitler coalition.

The notes alleged that more than a thousand former Nazi judges and prosecutors were still in office in West Germany and that West Germany's statute of limitations on Nazi crimes was contrary to international law and the United Nations Charter.

Under West German law, no new prosecution for manslaughter committed during the Nazi era can be started after May 8 in the former British zone of occupation and after July 1 in the former United States zone, says the New York Times. The legal position in the former French zone is unclear.

The fifteen-year limitation applies to a number of serious charges besides manslaughter but not to the charge of murder, for which the limitation runs twenty years. A Justice Ministry spokesman said the Government held that it would be contrary to the rule of law to extend the statute retroactively, as proposed by the Social Democrats.

Because Of Frat Bias Top Senior Refuses Its Award

The top-ranking senior in the Rutgers School of Business Administration has rejected an academic award from a fraternity because, he charged, the school's chapter practiced religious discrimination.

The student, Richard F. Lert, 21 years old, of 525 Elizabeth Avenue, Newark, N. J., received the Delta Sigma Pi scholarship key for the highest standing in the business administration program. He also won two other academic awards, says the New York Times. Then he returned the key to Dean George R. Esterly, saying the fraternity's chapter at Rutgers had practiced "religious exclusion" while he was on the campus. Mr. Lert is Jewish.

William Vichiconti, of 215 Seventy-second Street, North Bergen, N. J., president of the chapter, denied that discrimination was practiced and said the group's constitution contained no religious stipulation. But he said he did not "believe" there were any Jewish students among its thirty members at Rutgers.

The Dean of Students, Edwin M. Durand, said that an examination of the fraternity's constitution had convinced him that no religious bars were included. He said that faculty did not interfere in its selection of members.

Her gown of lilac-toned peau de sole, was fashioned with a scooped neckline, and a softly flared skirt. Tisa Starr, sister of the bride, was junior bridesmaid. She wore a lilac-colored organza dress, with a bouffant skirt. Allen Waxman was best man. The ushers were: Stephen Clairman, brother of the groom; Allan Clairman, cousin of the groom; Robert Starr, brother of the bride; Barry Katz, cousin of the groom; Gerrod Sable, and Nathan Leipciger. In Toronto in 1920, there were 2,256 cases of diphtheria, and 224 deaths. Once toxoid was put into general use, this killer began to vanish, and in 1934, Toronto had its first year without a diphtheria death — first city of over 500,000 population in the world to achieve this miracle. There were no diphtheria cases in Toronto in 1958. The fact that diphtheria has become so rare is no reason to neglect immunization.

Israel Phiharmonic Orchestra To Visit U. S. For 30 Concerts

BY HENRY LEVY

An organization that has been called "Israel's most treasured cultural possession", the Israel Philharmonic Orchestra, comes to the U.S. this fall for a seven-week coast to coast tour under the auspices of the America-Israel Cultural Foundation. Following a gala opening performance at the Metropolitan Opera House on Sunday evening, October 16, under the baton of La Scala's Carlo Maria Giulini the orchestra will play some thirty engagements, going as far west as San Francisco and Los Angeles, before returning to New York for a farewell concert at Madison Square Garden on Wednesday evening, November 30.

It will be the second American tour for the orchestra, last seen in the U.S. in 1951, after which the late Monnett B. Davis, U.S. Ambassador to Israel, described the group as "Israel's best ambassador abroad". The second American tour, a highlight of the America Israel Cultural Foundation's program of cultural exchange, will be under the banner of America's leading impressario, S. Hurok. The American tour, which will include two performances in Canada, will launch the twenty-fifth anniversary year for the 100-piece orchestra. It was on December 26, 1936, in a converted exhibition hall adjacent to the Tel-Aviv port, that the orchestra gave its inaugural concert with Arturo Toscanini as conductor.

When Bronislaw Huberman projected his plan of gathering together the pick of the European musicians who had been displaced in the Nazi holocaust and welding them into a first class ensemble which should find its home in Palestine, it was viewed as preposterous and impossible of realization. Palestine was then a small and insecure country and announcements that Toscanini, the world's most famous conductor, was to come and open the concerts was met with incredulity. But when in the autumn of 1936 the musicians arrived, and in December the Maestro made his appearance, the dream became a reality. When Toscanini raised his magic baton, it was to an overflowing hall and to a wildly enthusiastic audience in a country that had gone music-mad in its joyous reception of the great Italian. It is thus symbolic, and particularly appropriate, that another great Italian musician should lead the orchestra on its second American tour.

From its very beginnings, the most celebrated conductors and soloists have appeared with Israel's orchestra. Toscanini returned the following season; Dr. Malcolm Sargent, Felix Weingartner, Issai Dobrowen, Eugene Szenkar, William Steinberg followed suit. Bronislaw Huberman himself, Adolf Busch, Ignaz Friedman, Benno Moisevitch came to give their music to the country. During World War II the country's rich local talent supplied conductors and soloists, several also being drawn from the Allied Forces.

With the re-opening of the Mediterranean, Bernardino Molinari arrived from Italy and Charles Munch came from France. Leonard Bernstein, Jasha Horenstein, Nicolai Malco came to conduct; 1949 brought Paul Paray; 1950 brought Dr. Serge Koussevitzky. Rafael Kubelik, Igor Markevitch, Ferenc Fricsay, Sergiu Celibidache, Georg Solti, Erich Leinsdorf, and Dimitri Mitropoulos are among those conductors who have brought their art to Israel.

Each new season brings glittering names to the roster of guests and in the season just concluded, among the conductors there have been Jean Martinon, Carlo Maria Giulini, Jean Fournet, Josef Krips, Eugene Ormandy, Charles Munch, and Nino Sansogno, while among the soloists have been the pianists Arthur Rubinstein, Glenn Gould, Hephzibah Menuhin; violinists, Zino Francescatti, Yehudi Menuhin, Isaac Stern; and singers have included Richard Tucker, Fernando Corena, and George London, of the New York Metropolitan Opera. From the start the Orchestra has operated with a system of guest conductors which it still continues although in the winter of 1958 the noted French conductor, Jean Martinon, was appointed Music Director for a two-year period ending with the 1959-60 season.

The Israel Philharmonic Orchestra may really be called a world in microcosm; its make-up is that of a veritable United Nations with representative coming from a dozen different countries. There are members from Germany, Poland, Hungary, Austria, Russia, Switzerland, U.S.A., Holland, Belgium, and Israel itself. When the Orchestra was founded it consisted of 72 members; today it counts 100, and of these 25 percent were either raised or trained in Israel. There are five women players, two sets of three-brother teams, and one married couple among the members. There are two Americans, both married to Israelis, the first trumpet, Sheldon Rocker, from Minneapolis; and the first trombone, Ray Parnes, from Louisville, Kentucky.

The development of the Orchestra took place against a troubled background: Arab disturbances, the second World War, the Israel War of Independence. But the Orchestra never stopped playing. It had to travel in armoured trucks; it was often fired upon but it always got to the place of the concert. Only when Jerusalem was severed from the rest of the country did concerts cease there, and then as soon as the besieged city could be reached the I.P.O. brought its music to the capital.

During World War II, the Orchestra gave over 160 concerts for the Allied Forces. In the Israel war, it gave many concerts for Israel troops in remote places. One of the most memorable was that given on the night of the fight for Lydda Airport at a military camp for the men who later captured that important point. Another unforgettable "military concert" was that at the Biblical town of Beersheba when the ensemble, with Bernstein at its head, played for thousands of men of the Negev forces.

The Orchestra plays an average of nine concerts a fortnight throughout a ten-month season (from October through July) and counts over 25,000 subscribers (over 17,000 in Tel-Aviv only), which in a country with a population of two million must constitute a world record. While Tel Aviv is its home city, the Orchestra also plays regularly in Jerusalem, Haifa, and in the smaller communities as remote as Eilat. In addition to its subscription concerts, it gives a special series of Youth Concerts and a free concert monthly for the Israel armed forces.

Although the Orchestra's full ten-month subscription programs in Israel prevent the I.P.O. from accepting many of its invitations to go abroad, the Orchestra from its very beginning has travelled. Two weeks after its organization, Arturo Toscanini led the new Orchestra on a tour of Egypt. In succeeding years, it regularly gave concerts in the neighboring countries. The Orchestra's most memorable tour was its first American visit in 1951 when it gave 54 concerts in 40 United States and Canadian communities with Dr. Serge Koussevitzky and Leonard Bernstein as music directors, and Izler Solomon as associate conductor.

At that time, the late Olin Downes, of the New York Times, said that it was "an accomplished orchestra of ninety-five excellent musicians, capable of an admirably competent interpretation of the modern repertory, playing with an earnestness and feeling worthy of the culture and the ideal for which it stands." Four years later,

The Head Of Weizmann Institute Is Israel's New Chief Scientist

BY PHILIP GILLON, OF THE AMERICAN COMMITTEE FOR THE WEIZMANN INSTITUTE, IN NEW YORK

Professor Israel Dostrovsky, chairman of the new Israel National Council for Scientific Research and Technological Development and of the new National Nuclear Research Center, who will also head the Scientific Development Projects Division at the Ministry of Defense, looks like the prototype of a scientist. He has the domed forehead and the spectacles symbolical of his mystery. In fact his features resemble those of that champion of the intellectuals, Adlai Stevenson. In his own way he is typical of his generation. His father, one of Israel's most eminent doctors, immigrated in 1919, when the boy was a year old. Israel showed an early passion and bent for science, leading his class at Jerusalem's Rehavia Gymnasia in physics and chemistry. At the age of 13 he was already in the Hagana; three years later he gave up science, apparently forever, to join his friends farming at Kibbutz Mazz Haim.

The Arab riots of 1936 brought him back into the service of Hagana: when the national crisis abated he went through a personal crisis, deciding, after lengthy heart-searching, to give up the kibbutz for science. He went to the University of London to graduate as a Ph.D. and remained there as a lecturer and research worker throughout World War Two. He returned to Israel in 1948 to establish the Isotopes Department at the Weizmann Institute. But the War of Liberation required the formation of a scientific unit and he commanded a group which carried out the survey of the Negev, since become famous. The discoveries of this team of uranium phosphates, copper and other minerals led to the establishment of some of Israel's major industries. In 1952, Dr. Dostrovsky was awarded the Weizmann Prize.

Many of Israel's top scientists today have a similar history and background. They were born or reared in Israel itself rather than the Diaspora and are proving Where would you go? What would you do?

Well, we'll wager you'd make some very special plans for the sixty minutes ahead.

For the car that stands in wait so majestically in the soft light of the evening is a new 1960 Cadillac. And the promise of an hour at its wheel is an enchanting opportunity indeed.

But no matter where the highway might lead you, we know what your journey would be like.

First of all, it would be filled with the most wonderful comfort imaginable. You would be literally surrounded by beauty and luxury and spaciousness—with every conceivable motoring convenience in constant attendance.

You would feel marvellously rested and relaxed. For this great car is incredibly easy to drive ... and it is miraculously quiet in operation.

And how proud and thrilled you'd be! For it's a remarkable experience to sit here where the world's distinguished motorists ride—and find yourself heir to the glances of admiration that inevitably come a Cadillac's way.

A pleasant daydream, you say? Not at all.

In fact, the reality is no farther away than your nearest Cadillac dealer's showroom.

He has the car and he has the keys—and if you have an hour's time and a special destination in mind, then you ought to get together with him very soon.

When your journey's done, he'll be happy to explain how easily your favorite Cadillac can be yours for all the hours ahead.

Wouldn't tomorrow be a good day to introduce yourself to the "car of cars"?

ISRAEL PHILHARMONIC ORCHESTRA TO VISIT U.S. FOR 30 CONCERTS

in the spring of 1955, the Orchestra made its first tour of Europe, giving 43 concerts in 37 cities of nine countries under the direction of conductors Paul Klecki and Paul Paray. Again, this was an unqualified success with the most important music critics joining with the enthusiastic audiences in lauding the Orchestra's performances.

Among its most interesting events was the concert given for the Pope in the Vatican as a tribute to the help he had given Jewry during the time of the Nazi reign of terror. The Orchestra's most recent appearance, outside of Israel, was its appearance in Cyprus early this year. With Jean Martinon conducting, the Orchestra won wide acclaim in this short tour sponsored by the Israel Foreign Office.

The American tour will be preceded by two performances in Paris at the Palais de Chaillot on October 10 and 11, and will be followed by a tour of the Far East that will take the Orchestra to the Phillippines, Japan, and India. The Far Eastern tour will be under the patronage of the Foreign Minister, Golda Meir. Besides Maestro Giulini, who will conduct the great majority of the concerts on the American tour, the other conductors who will participate in the tour are Eugene Ormandy and Josef Krips.

Tetanus or lockjaw is not a contagious disease but can easily be contracted. Immunization is effective and children whose outdoor play puts them in contact with dirt and the germs of tetanus, should receive this protection, together with their other immunizations.

Remember the recent threatened epidemic of poliomyelitis which frightened hundreds of citizens into lining up in the streets of Montreal to receive their polio shots, although they could have had their immunity previously. Last ditch thinking like this may result in the loss of life of some member of your own family.

This label tells you the whole story. It says that the soup inside the can is Heinz Vegetarian Vegetable Soup. Meaning, of course, a hearty, tasty vegetable soup. The label also says "vegetarian." A meaningful word, indeed! For this soup is made without meat or any meat ingredient whatsoever. It's strictly, strictly vegetarian. About all the label doesn't say is "how about some... tonight?" Well—how about it?

Labour's Concern For National Economic Deficiencies Which Threaten All Canadians, Old Or New

ADDRESS BY DAVE ARCHER, PRESIDENT OF THE ONTARIO FEDERATION OF LABOUR, TO THE IMMIGRATION SECTION OF THE SOCIAL PLANNING COUNCIL OF METROPOLITAN TORONTO, AT THE PARK PLAZA HOTEL

When we in the trade union movement discuss "problems" of immigration, we try first to remind ourselves of the facts of the case. One of the most obvious facts is that close to two million immigrants have come to Canada since the end of World War II. Considering that a great many of that number have had children since their arrival, and considering that Canada's population in 1945 was just slightly over twelve million, it becomes clear that this country has found ways and means of absorbing a tremendous inflow of people.

But when we say "absorbing", we mean finding jobs and homes; and providing at least the minimum services people need in order to exist. One way or another, this has been accomplished, not only for the two million newcomers from abroad but for some three million added through natural increase in the same period.

Then, as we look at other post-war developments we must recognize that there has been nothing catastrophic about this speedy growth in our population. Assuming that upward of a million immigrants have entered the labour force, it is obvious, for example, that this has not meant a million fewer jobs for native-born Canadians. Regardless of where one stands on the many issues involved in this subject, there is no disputing the fact that Canada has shown itself capable of an astonishing rate of population growth.

All this is true. But it is also true that immigration in the post-war period has not been entirely painless. Unemployment, housing shortages, and over-taxed or inadequate social services have added to the normal difficulties of adjustment for many immigrants. The fact that the vast majority of immigrants seem to have learned to live with Canadian conditions, good and bad, should not blind us to the severe hardships met by a minority, and the less crippling hardships met by many others. To a large extent these hardships are similar to those experienced by hundreds of thousands of native Canadians in the same period.

Unemployment in Canada is perhaps a little harder for the immigrant to understand because it reaches unpleasant proportions every winter, even when the general economic climate is favourable. Recessions, and we have had three of them since 1946, make matters worse. In March of 1958 the most conservative estimate of unemployment showed that one in every ten persons in the labour force was without a job and seeking work. Many thousands more were on temporary layoff. In Toronto alone we have seen more than 60,000 jobless through the greater part of the past two winters.

Considering that construction workers make up a major share of those seeking work at this time in the Toronto area, it would be a safe guess that at least 20,000 new Canadians (and probably many more) have been unemployed more or less all winter in Metropolitan Toronto. Numbers alone are no measure of the amount of human suffering resulting from this kind of enforced idleness. Those who see individual and family problems at close hand in the course of their work in social agencies are better equipped than the statistician to assess the full impact of unemployment.

I hardly need to point out to this audience that only within the last two years has federal and provincial assistance been available to the employable unemployed. It should be a matter of shame to the Canadian public that jobless workers are known to have deserted their wives and children in order that municipal relief would be provided to save their families from starvation.

Although we have enjoyed a high rate of general economic expansion since the war, we still find ourselves with a shortage of decent housing, especially for low-income families, and particularly in the central sections of our major cities. Toronto may not be the worst in this respect, but I am sure the officials of the Metro Housing Authority would be among the first to admit that it is a real and continuing problem. Contrary to the views of some ivory-tower planners, the only solution will be a vigorous program of redevelopment in the downtown area, coupled with an equally vigorous program of low-rental housing. As you know, we have scarcely scratched the surface of this problem.

As a result, thousands of families, including a great many new immigrants, are crowded together in a few older residential areas under conditions that many of us would have thought no longer possible in our society. Much publicity has been given to the famous "slum empire" in the lower Jarvis Street area; little has been said about the tens of thousands of sardine-tin flats in remodelled houses throughout central Toronto and well into the outlying areas. Many outwardly respectable dwellings in so-called better neighborhoods are literally rotting from within due to the greed and neglect of their landlord owners.

Immigrant families are a ready market for this substandard accommodation. When they have steady jobs, some savings and, inevitably, a car, they move on, but the chronic housing shortage forces others to take their place. So long as our governments continue to neglect low-rental housing in central locations, and even discourage it, as the Minister of Public Works has done in the case of Moss Park, there will be the same shortage and possibly more severe shortages in the future. This constitutes a vicious and wholly unnecessary obstacle to the integration of immigrants.

I have mentioned two of the most serious economic problems to be considered in any realistic discussion of immigration. I have indicated, I think, that organized labour sees unemployment and housing shortages as being closely related to the subject of immigration, not because they result from immigration (they obviously do not), but because they are threats to the well-being of all Canadians including immigrants. In case there are any here who think of immigration only in terms of supplying Canadian industry with an ever-expanding domestic market and a pool of manpower, let me put it this way:

Our failure to solve problems such as employment and housing will limit our capacity to admit and absorb immigrants. Looking back at the three post-war recessions, we might well ask whether Canada could not have admitted three or four hundred thousand more immigrants if we had been more successful in putting our economic house in order.

Some people are inclined to misconstrue labour's concern with unemployment as opposition to immigration as such. Allowing for a certain failure on the part of labour to explain its position to the public, after all, we do not own, control, or even influence any section of the daily press, I suspect that labour's so-called opposition to immigration is a convenient alibi for those who could, but will not, face up to the necessity of achieving full employment.

As for the myth that population expansion will automatically open up Canada's northland, well, it should be obvious that no 20th century immigrant is going to set up a tent in the middle of a muskeg wilderness and wait patiently for someone to start a factory or a mine or a bowling alley down the street. In the light of the large and growing pool of unemployment across the country, no one can seriously suggest that our economic growth is being held up by a shortage of labour. To claim, as some advertisers are doing overseas, that job opportunities in Canada are unlimited, is to do a great disservice to the prospective immigrant.

Exploitation is something trade unions are commonly supposed to have stamped out fifty years ago. Yet today we find that the sweatshop, the kickback, and the job agency racket are still with us. It is no reflection on the immigrants themselves, nor is it intended to be, to state that they are the prime targets and victims of these forms of exploitation today. Unions are constantly striving to eliminate these evils through organization and through government inspection and enforcement of minimum standards. I regret to say that we meet opposition at every turn, often from the same people who, under other circumstances, praise the immigrants's contribution to Canadian life. Indeed, this praise is well-deserved by those who overcome all the handicaps society puts in their way and who, in fact, do become useful and good Canadian citizens.

Although there are no records to prove it, I think the proportion of first and second-generation Canadians in trade unions must by this time constitute close to a majority of our membership. Therefore, it is reasonable to assume that newcomers will find many trade unionists not only willing but able by virtue of their own experiences, to help them in overcoming a great many difficulties they will inevitably face in the first few months or years. Our people will willingly co-operate, if shown the need for their co-operation, in community efforts aimed at more effective integration of the immigrant. But we certainly cannot and will not conceal our concern for those national economic deficiencies which remain a threat to all Canadians, whether old or new.

Problems encountered during a child's first years are quite common. Helpful information on the many phases of this subject may be found in the Child Training series of pamphlets available from local or provincial health departments free on request.

themselves worthy successors to the many fine scientists who came to Palestine in the thirties. The example, inspiration, and tireless efforts of Dr. Chaim Weizmann induced men who were forced out of Europe to settle in the country. Then came a long gap, as there were no new arrivals from Europe and only a small percentage of Jewish scientists from the sheltered West decided to pull up their roots and come here. After this gap came Dr. Dostrovsky and his contemporaries. Does this mean that the "normalized" children of Israel are the equal in scientific brilliance to Jews in other lands?

"I would hardly call us 'normalized'," points out Dr. Dostrovsky. "With our backgrounds of riots, wars, and, you might add, very high idealism, we were anything but 'normal'. Certainly the general standards among those sabras (native-born) in scientific fields compare not unfavorably with those found elsewhere in the world, although we also have our fair share of the not-so-good. Of course, you must remember that Israelis who have talent get trained abroad as well as in Israel." He insists that it is all-important that Israelis should be sent to advanced countries to round out their education, and on periodic trips to refresh their ideas even after they reach the top.

"Many of our men have made great sacrifices to remain in Israel," he says bluntly. "Some of them might have been Nobel Prize winners by now if they had gone to the United States. We are at the end of a line of supply and abroad they can work in teams of people who are all on the top level. We have got the quality, all right, but not enough of it. We must increase the numbers of our scientists by going right back into the schools."

Dr. Dostrovsky rejects rather contemptuously the distinction drawn by some lay people between pure and applied science. He says that the real distinction should be between directed and non-directed science. Directed science selects a specific problem and aims at finding a solution. Non-directed science is just as important and the two often overlap: for example, it was non-directed science that led to the devising in Israel of a new process for the manufacture of heavy water, which has become a useful source of income. One of the main tasks of the re-formed Research Council is to determine priorities in scientific work. But first of all Israel must increase her family of scientists.

Dr. Dostrovsky is a physical chemist. "At low echelons the distinctions between physicists and chemists and other specialized disciplines may be important, but when people go to fundamentals, scientists of all disciplines meet. The basic principles are the same."

He describes the new atomic reactor as the second big research tool placed in the hands of Israel's scientists. The first was the three-million volt Van de Graaff accelerator (the "atom-smasher") at the Weizmann Institute. The two supplement each other. As Research Director of the Atomic Energy Commission (his other recent appointment) one of his duties will be to help to determine the work to be done at the reactor where half-a-dozen projects can be carried on at the same time.
